1. Ion Zissu, representative abroad of the Rumanian Independent Social-Democrats led by Titel Petrescu refused the suggestion of Barbu Niculescu, nephew and secretary of General Rădescu, that the Independent Social-Democrats support Rădescu. Zissu, who is presently in Paris, discovered that certain Socialists were being encouraged by the Rădescu faction to revolt against his leadership. A committee composed of Eftimie Gherman, Gabriel Bădăraș, S. Schineanu, Sacha Wolman, Captain Paul Gheorghiu, Captain D. Enciu and V.V. Stanciu, with D.G.D. Serbanescu as secretary, had been created in Paris to form an Independent Social-Democratic Party in Exile. Following a conversation with Zissu, Serbanescu wrote to the Council of the Political Parties and to General Rădescu announcing that he had resigned from the new committee.
2. Zissu ascribed General Rădescu's success in the formation of this Social-Democratic committee to his promise to place all its members on a "National Committee" to be created by him. According to Zissu, the Rădescu faction is desirous of winning the support of representatives abroad of the National Liberal and Independent Social-Democratic Parties in order to brand the representatives of the National Peasant Party as obstructing the unification of the Rumanian emigration.
